A device in which a light-emitting layer is formed of an organic material has attracted attention as a next-generation display device because a device of this type does not need a backlight. This is because the organic light-emitting device can be driven at a low direct-current voltage and has a high-speed response, and thus a display of this type is expected to be used in a wider variety of applications. As a method of producing an organic light-emitting device, a simple matter is mixing an organic material with a light-emitting material using a dry process or wet process, and thereafter a solution of the mixture is applied to an appropriate substrate. If the organic material and the light-emitting material are substantially insoluble in a solvent used, the solvent is added with the aim of facilitating the dispersion. Patent Document 1 proposes a method for producing an organic light-emitting device by applying an organic solution to which, in a desired amount, a light-emitting material having a low molecular weight and a solvent having a boiling point of 170° C. or higher is added.Low subcutaneous fat in very preterm infants is associated with increased risk of childhood overweight.
